OBAMA COMMUTES MANNING SENTENCE

In one of his final acts before leaving office, President Barack Obama commuted the prison sentence of Chelsea Manning, the former U.S. military intelligence analyst behind the biggest breach of classified materials in U.S. history, the White House said. Manning has been a focus of a worldwide debate on government secrecy since she provided more than 700,000 documents, videos, diplomatic cables and battlefield accounts to the anti-secrecy group WikiLeaks — a leak for which she was sentenced to serve 35 years in prison. Manning, formerly known as U.S. Army Private First Class Bradley Manning, was born male but revealed after being convicted of espionage that she identifies as a woman. REUTERS

BRITAIN TO LEAVE EU SINGLE MARKET

2 Britain will quit the EU single market when it leaves the European Union, Prime Minister Theresa May said, in a decisive speech that set a course for a clean break with the world's largest trading bloc. Setting out a vision that could determine Britain's future for generations. May answered criticism that she has been coy about her strategy with a 12-point plan toward what has been dubbed a "hard Brexit." May promised to seek the greatest possible access to European markets, but said Britain would aim to establish its own free trade deals with countries far beyond Europe, and impose limits on immigration from the continent. For the first time, she acknowledged that those measures would require withdrawing from the market of 500 million people, founded on principles of free movement of goods and people. REUTERS

SEARCH FOR MH370 PLANE CALLED OFF

4 The deep-sea search for missing Malaysia Airlines flight MH370 ended on Tuesday without any trace being found of the plane that vanished in 2014 with 239 people on board, the three countries involved in the search said. The location of Flight MH370 has become one of the world's greatest aviation mysteries since the plane, a Boeing 777, disappeared en route to Beijing from the Malaysian capital of Kuala Lumpur. "Despite every effort using the best science available ... the search has not been able to locate the aircraft," Malaysian, Australian and Chinese authorities said in a statement. "The decision to suspend the underwater search has not been taken lightly nor without sadness." The last search vessel left the area on Tuesday, the three countries said. REUTERS

Tasers are used by most Massachusetts law enforcement. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Tasers might compel use of force, opponents say

More than 6,500 officers statewide are trained to carry Tasers.

ERIN TIERNAN
@ErinTiernan
erin.tiernan@metro.us

After less than a year on the job with Tasers, instances of use of force by state police has doubled.

Department officials say the data could be misleading, because the devices were never fired in many cases, but civil rights advocates warn an overreliance on stun guns by law enforcement across Massachusetts and the U.S. could be part of a trend in which police reach for a weapon instead of using their words.

Troopers in Massachusetts used force 402 times in 2016 compared with just 208 times in 2015, the data show.

Of the increase, Tasers accounted for 130 use-of-force incidents, but people were actually shocked with them only 25 times. Factoring in those numbers, use of force tallies are more in line with 2014 numbers, data show.

Every time a Taser gun is unholstered, pointed at someone or the laser on the weapon is targeted, it counts as use of force, said David Procopio, state police spokesman.

"This is the industry standard for recording use of force with an electronic control weapon," he said.

Electronic control weapons, also called ECWs, are more commonly known by the brand name Taser. When a Taser gun is deployed it sends 50,000 volts of electricity into a person's body for five seconds, rendering their muscles useless.

"In an ideal situation, and ECW is going to be a deterrent and persuade a suspect to just surrender, and that's to the benefit of the trooper, the suspect, and to everyone," he said. "We believe ECWs continue to increase safety for troopers and the public both because they are an effective, less lethal tool."

State police spent $1 million on 900 of them to outfit all troopers in April.

"They are a tool that will help resolve hostile confrontations before they escalate into situations requiring lethal force," State Police Colonel Richard McKeon said at the time.

But Carl Williams, staff attorney for ACLU Massachusetts, worries that access to ECWs might entice officers to skip the de-escalation tactics in favor of reaching for their Tasers.

> "If the device's existence tends to escalate force that's a terrible thing."
> Carl Williams

"If Tasers are used instead of more lethal weaponry in general, that would be a good thing. Tasers used instead of police officers saying or commanding something or repeating a request for a third time, that's a bad thing," Williams said. "If the device's existence tends to escalate force that's a terrible thing."

Across Massachusetts 230 law enforcement agencies or 6,500 officers carry Tasers.

A state report released in November shows steady increases in both the number of agencies using the weapons and the instances of officers using them.

Across the state, Tasers were fired in record high 619 cases in 2015, the year for which the most recent data is available through the state's Executive Office of Public Safety and Security. There were 1,102 total incidents involving Tasers, up from 275 in 2010 when just 82 agencies were approved to carry the weapons.

The number of incidents has increased every year since 2010, but the report shows signs that the rate of growth is slowing.

From 2010 to 2011, ECW incidents grew by almost 90 percent. This rate of growth dropped to 61.4 percent the following year. Since the end of 2013, rates of growth have not exceeded 13 percent. This is because since 2013, the number of approved agencies and trained officers has also grown.

Procopio, speaking for state police, said that simply possessing the Tasers does not necessarily lead to more use by his officers.

"We use a force continuum or ladder in which the type of force that is allowed escalates in direct correlation to the level of threat that a trooper or the pub is facing," he said.

Study: Self-driving cars could help employ 2M people with disabilities

The technology could also reduce health care costs by bettering transportation for the disabled.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

RUDERMAN FAMILY FOUNDATION

Self-driving cars aren't just for the distracted driver who wants life to be more convenient. The new technology could radically affect the lives of those with disabilities, according to a recent study.

Boston-based Ruderman Family Foundation published a study detailing how self-driving cars could open up two million job opportunities for people with disabilities, and reduce annual health care expenditures by $19 billion by lessening the frequency of missed doctors' appointments.

"People with disabilities make up 20 percent of our community — one in every five people anywhere in the world has some kind of disability, whether physical or intellectual," said Jay Ruderman, president of the foundation. "People with disabilities are also the most segregated population in our society."

That isolation mainly comes from a lack of employment — 70 percent of those with disabilities are unemployed, meaning they just sit at home, Ruderman said. This is tied to a lack of accessible transportation.

"Unless you are on public transportation that is accessible, you can't get a job," Ruderman said.

"Self-driving cars are the technology that is moving forward and what we're telling the makers and the governmental organizations that regulate them is that people with disabilities need to be taken into account. They will be biggest beneficiaries of this technology."

Kristina Kopic, contributor to the study, said that developers can add certain features to ensure that those with disabilities can benefit from autonomous vehicles.

Because the disability community includes such a wide spectrum — from people with epilepsy to those who are paraplegic, for example — companies building self-driving cars need to consult with members of the disabled community, Kopic said.

For drivers who are blind, self-driving cars need to have an auditory interface. For those who are deaf, there needs to be visual cues, lights and written instructions. For the population that has mobility concerns, these cars should be wheelchair accessible, the study says.

Baker eyes penalties for companies that don't offer health care

Companies that do not offer their employees health insurance would pay a $2,000 annual assessment per full-time worker to the state under a plan Gov. Charlie Baker intends to offer later this month to blunt the impact of escalating, enrollment-driven costs in the state's Medicaid program, the State House News Service has learned.

The proposal — the bulk of which is expected to be filed within the governor's budget due next week — would also impose growth caps on the rates health providers can charge for medical services in an effort to control the cost of care in the commercial market and make it more affordable for employers.

Both ideas come as the state is grappling with questions about how to control growth in health care costs in the public and private markets and as enrollment in MassHealth has reached an all-time high — a projected 1.93 million people in fiscal 2017 — putting unsustainable pressure on state finances.

Gov. Charlie Baker GETTY IMAGES

Provider price caps in the commercial market are also part of the administration's plans, according to officials, as a cost control measure designed to make insurance plans more affordable for employers and employees and to discourage avoidable enrollment in MassHealth.

The employer assessment, which would bring an estimated $300 million into state coffers, represents a revival of the so-called fair share contribution plan that was a linchpin of the 2006 universal health care law in Massachusetts before it was repealed to make way for the federal Affordable Care Act.

The details of Baker's multipart plan to address the costs that come with surging enrollment in MassHealth despite low unemployment, population growth, and the highest rate of insured residents in the country were laid out in an internal policy planning document obtained by the News Service.

The state employer mandate was repealed in 2013 as lawmakers and then-Gov. Deval Patrick worked to bring Massachusetts into compliance with the Affordable Care Act. A parallel federal mandate that would have fined employers with over 50 employees that did not offer insurance has never gone into effect.

RACHAEL CLEMMONS

The Zayn and Gigi engagement rumors have finally begun

To be, or not to be: That is the question. More specifically, to be engaged or not to be engaged. As in, are Gigi Hadid and Zayn Malik for real for real engaged? I have so many questions!

Gigi was spotted wearing a delicate gold band on a very special finger, which has me and Perez Hilton wondering whether things are hashtag happening, or if she's just, you know, wearing a random ring on her left ring finger.

Gigi and Zayn have been dating for about a year and make quite the couple. So let's just see if that little ol' ring stays put amongst these engagement rumors, shall we?

Lindsay Lohan probably didn't convert to Islam, OK?

The artist formerly known as LiLo is at it again.

Over the weekend, Lindsay Lohan scrubbed her entire Instagram, leaving her 5.7 million followers the words: "alaikum salam," an Arabic greeting that loosely translates to "peace be unto you." And if you're thinking: "What even is happening?!" — you're not alone.

Is this simply a break from social media? A cry for attention? Some thrilling combination of both? Hard to say.

In 2014, she described herself to Oprah as a "very spiritual person." And as recently as 2015, Lindsay was carrying around the Quran as a chic-yet-functional accessory. Many are speculating the maybe-former actress has converted to Islam, with some Muslims rallying around the "Herbie: Fully Loaded" star in full support.

Gossip Cop says Lohan's rep confirmed the star has not converted, citing her ex-momager Dina as saying she's just taking a break from that Insta-life — but who knows?

As always Lindsay Lohan manages to be a half-frown emoji of mystery. Never change, girl.

Ciara says abstinence before marriage was hard

Ciara opened up about her marriage to cutie QB Russell Wilson, admitting that the whole abstinence-before-marriage thing was definitely a challenge.

In February's issue of Cosmopolitan South Africa, the Grammy-winning songstress says it was important to put friendship first as a way to build intimacy. She adds, "Knowing that you'll always have the friendship and that you can always go back to it is very important, and very powerful." The couple announced they were expecting their first child in late October.

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

It's worth noting, of course, that before her beautiful and very morally upstanding marriage to Russell Wilson, Ciara had a very dramatic courtship and engagement with rapper Future, and he was all kinds of terrible.

So yeah, the whole friendship and intimacy and whatever else is cute and all, but abstinence isn't for everyone Ciara, sorry. Like, if everyone believed in abstinence before marriage, we would only have half of the whole Jolie-Pitt clan, and that would be a real shame. Nice idea, though.

Amanda Seyfried is very (very) excited about getting hitched

Amanda Seyfried is really, really excited about getting married.

Here's a little background presented totally objectively and without comment: According to Lainey Gossip, Seyfried and her now fiance, Thomas Sadoski, met on the set of an off-Broadway play called "The Way We Get By" in 2015. Thomas was married, but by October of that year, he and his wife were divorced. Thomas and Amanda then worked together on a film called "The Last Word" in early 2016 and — well, the rest is history.

Didn't you know? The couple is happily engaged and expecting. And Amanda is very excited about it.

The actress got candid with Vogue Australia about how pumped she is for her wedding, saying she's "never been excited by anything more in [her] life." She also admitted to feeling a little hesitant about being the center of attention on her wedding day, since she's already "played a bride a billion times" with the glamorous red carpets and Met Galas she's attended. Color me jeals.

Congrats to the happy, very beautiful, also very — let's be real here — photogenic couple.

In "20th Century Women," now in theaters, Greta Gerwig plays a photographer who lives in a very progressive commune-style house in 1979 Santa Barbara. A24

Greta Gerwig is a California girl

The "20th Century Woman" actress may be a New Yorker, but her heart is on the other coast.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

In "20th Century Women," we see Greta Gerwig as we've never seen her before: With red hair — and a lot less giggly and insecure than usual. The acclaimed actress plays Abbey, a young, serious photographer and cancer survivor who lives in a Santa Barbara house in 1979. Her landlord's (Annette Bening) tenants also include her teenage son (Lucas Jade Zurman), a teenage girl (Elle Fanning) and a 40-something fix-it man (Billy Crudup). The latest from filmmaker Mike Mills ("Beginners"), it finds characters trying to eke by and hang out, unaware of the looming Reagan '80s.

For one thing, making a movie set in 1979 means you get to do a deep dive in the music from that era, which is some of the greatest, coolest music ever recorded.

I know music pretty well. There were some deep cuts for me, particularly in the punk scenes, like The Raincoats and The Slits. I had heard of them, but I didn't know a lot about them. They didn't feel like they were mine. When I was getting into the character and listening to the music, I really felt like I took ownership of that music that had seemed more oblique to me.

Did you have a favorite among the bands you'd never really listened to before?

I'm all for The Raincoats. They're great. I can always tell when I love a song if my overwhelming sense is I want to put it in a movie. [Laughs] That's when I know I love it. In a way, putting a song in a movie is almost forcing people to enjoy it the way you enjoy it — because they're presumably trapped watching your movie.

This is one of many new films that seems relevant after the election. The scene where they watch Jimmy Carter's "Crisis of Confidence" speech — it's as though he was speaking about right now.

That speech is strangely prophetic; it's amazing a president ever spoke that way. We seem to measure our national health by how much people are buying. And he's talking about not buying. That's pretty wild. And nobody heeded his warning at all. [Laughs] They just ran full steam into the '80s and '90s, right up to today. We just love buying s—! [Laughs]

I love L.A.

This presents a really fascinating portrait of California, too. Even though you're a New Yorker now, you were born and raised there, so it must be particularly resonant.

I'm a California girl. My brother's still there, my sister's there, most of my family's there. I'm deeply related to California. It's so odd because I don't think anyone associates me with California. I grew up in Sacramento, and Annette grew up in San Diego. We talked a lot about the peculiarities of California that I think are often missed. When people think of California, they think of Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Silent protest

"Re·volt·ing" stages a one-night artistic response to Inauguration Day.

CARLY OLSON
@CarlyOlson28
letters@metro.us

On Inauguration Day, protests of all sorts will be taking place across America. A display of protest will also be happening in the Distillery Gallery in South Boston — but of the artistic persuasion.

Titled "Re·volt·ing: An Art Show in Protest," this one-night pop-up show Jan. 20 will display work inspired by America's political climate. More than 40 artists and curators will show portraiture, drawing, sculptural pieces and performance art.

Head curator Robert Moeller has been putting on pop-up shows for years — between the gallery's standard exhibitions, Moeller uses a space for a show, usually for less than 24 hours. "Typically, museum curators may be planning a show for several years," Moeller says. "We install the show Thursday evening and open on Friday evening. You don't have much time to futz."

Though "protest" is in the title of the show, don't expect to show up to a combative environment. "There are no effigies of Trump being burned or anything," Moeller adds. "I'm not asking for any artificial militancy, but to show work that reflects how artists are feeling."

To assemble a diverse group of artists and works, Moeller invited eight curators to select pieces for the show. "Once I choose a curator, they're fully in charge of what they can and can't do," Moeller explains. Though Moeller knows what most of the pieces are, he won't know how the works will play together until installation.

Rhode Island artist J.R. Uretsky is one of the curators Moeller chose for the show. She notes: "The show is about a bunch of artists and curators coming together and seeing what kind of conversations come out of the juxtaposition of different kinds of work."

Urestky stressed how valuable pop-up shows can be for emerging artists. "Re·volt·ing" is going to feature work from artists ranging in fame from Annette Lemieux — whose work has been shown in the Whitney Museum — to younger local artists.

For her curated section, Uretsky will include the work of four performance artists. "There's an urgency that comes with performance art that is really captivating," she says.

If you go

Jan. 20 at 7 to 10 p.m.

Uretsky describes her artists' work as not only political but "hard to watch."

"I wanted to give voice to people that might be underrepresented in this moment, like queer people, women and people of color." Dealing with work that is either satirical, visually jarring or deeply personal, Uretsky hopes giving space to these artists will open the eyes of those who come see the show.

Moeller makes a point to say that ultimately, "Re·volt·ing" is an art show, not a protest. "This space is to allow artists to reflect back on an impactful election," he says.

Uretsky says she agrees. "I don't believe there is going to be a call to action, but bringing this many voices together will remind us that we can still come together, be funny, be weird, and that we need to keep supporting each other," she says.

Qualifying for your Medical Marijuana Card still makes sense!

Medical Marijuana is used to treat the following conditions:
• HIV/AIDS • Glaucoma • ALS • MS • Hepatitis C • Parkinson's • Crohn's • Cancer and any other condition our doctor recommends.

With a medical card:
- The cost will be cheaper. In Colorado recreational strains sell for $35 an eighth while the same strain for medical patients is $100/oz[1];
- No tax on medical – a 12% tax on recreational at this point. Washington State has a 37% tax on their recreational products;
- A discount for medical and possible insurance coverage for it;
- You may be exempt from any taxes if you are a registered patient as in Washington State;[2]
- You may choose from a greater VARIETY, TYPE and STRENGTH of CBD and THC strains;

MEDICAL MARIJUANA IS AVAILABLE NOW.
- Recreational marijuana will not be sold in retail stores until January 2018.

The dreaded thaw

Remember Jan. 25, 2015? We didn't have much snow then, either ... ISTOCK

The Downhill Report

ERIC WILBUR
@GlobeEricWilbur

It certainly didn't take too long to turn early-season optimism into a January malaise. Warm temperatures and rain put a damper on the landscape last week, just in time to prepare for the MLK holiday weekend, which greeted guests with icy conditions across New England.

It wasn't good news for local ski areas, likening the trails to your local outdoor skating destination. That likely kept a good number of people away from the hills, expecting slick skiing and riding, not to mention more crowded slopes than usual. Instead of welcoming the masses for the long weekend, most resorts found themselves making snow in an effort to catch up where last week's thaw did its damage.

On Saturday, Josh Fox of the incomparable Single Chair Weather Blog, located in the heart of Vermont, pointed out that the pattern "still looks like garbage for the next 10 days or so." So … not great.

Or … maybe not. We're logistically about halfway through the 2016-17 skiing and riding season here in the Northeast (less than halfway if some of us have anything to say about it), and this past week-plus is really the only bummer that we've had yet to speak of. It's a kick to the gut that the worst week weather-wise here in New England would come as we're stuck watching the Lake Tahoe region receive upwards of 20 feet of snow. But at least we didn't have to dig out from that Armageddon. So, there's that too.

Besides, there are already some signs that Fox's prognosis of doom and gloom over the next week or so may already be shifting into a positive direction. On Monday, Fox noted that change in the forecast has snuck up on him, predicting 5-8 inches of powder in the higher elevations of Vermont.

Likewise, the National Weather Service issued a weather alert for eastern New Hampshire that was due to deliver 4-8 inches of snow — and possibly sleet — Tuesday evening into Wednesday afternoon, perhaps meaning a bit of a replenishment for places like Crotched Mountain and Pats Peak. Other forecasts put portions of Maine, including Sunday River, in the range of 9-12 inches from the same storm.

That's good for base-building, most specifically. But any hope for a midweek powder day is probably going to be left out in the cold.

It's also an indication of every winter in New England. Just when the thaw comes threatening your livelihood, there's a turn around the corner.

For instance, as of Jan. 25 two years ago, the Boston area had seen 10.6 inches of snow. That's about the same amount that the Jan. 7 storm deposited in areas of Massachusetts.

Of course, that 10.6 inches two years ago eventually turned into a record winter that brought a record-breaking 108.6 inches of snow to Boston. Or, do you not remember?

Last winter's dud of a ski season may still be fresh in your mind, but the events of two years ago are the most recent reason to understand that a January thaw does not mean the end of a ski season. Not by any stretch.

As for being halfway through the season, talk to me in February and we'll see where we are.

Filled with warm luxurious tones, this spacious Back Bay apartment gives a cozy impression but offers plenty of space to spread out in its three stories.

The first thing you'll notice when you tour this Beacon Street brownstone is the rich woodwork accented by luxurious decorations.

Boston architect Guy Grassi and interior designer Bunny Williams collaborated to turn this condo into a truly unique space.

The residence, located at 200 to 202 Beacon St., spans two apartment buildings, has the potential for three to six bedrooms, boasts a private entrance and offers phenomenally high ceilings. If the staircase doesn't suit you, an elevator will ferry you up and down to all three levels.

The real living goes on the condo's second floor, which includes a 40-foot wide living room, a large library, dining room, and a kitchen where you can truly cook with a view. Wide river-facing windows offer spectacular views of the Charles River.

On the parlor level, a private street entrance that gives the feeling of a single-family home and opens up to reception area that leads to the master suite. And what suit would be complete without a library, master bedroom, huge master closets, washer/dryer, kitchenette, and large master bathroom with fireplace and Jacuzzi? This one has it all.

A connected garden-level unit may be accessed by a separate entrance and consists of one bedroom, a living room, laundry, full kitchen and private stone and landscaped garden.

The beautiful architecture and layout feature a total of nine rooms, three and a half baths, two full kitchens, in-unit laundry, and (of course) parking spaces for four.

And it can all be yours for $9.99 million.

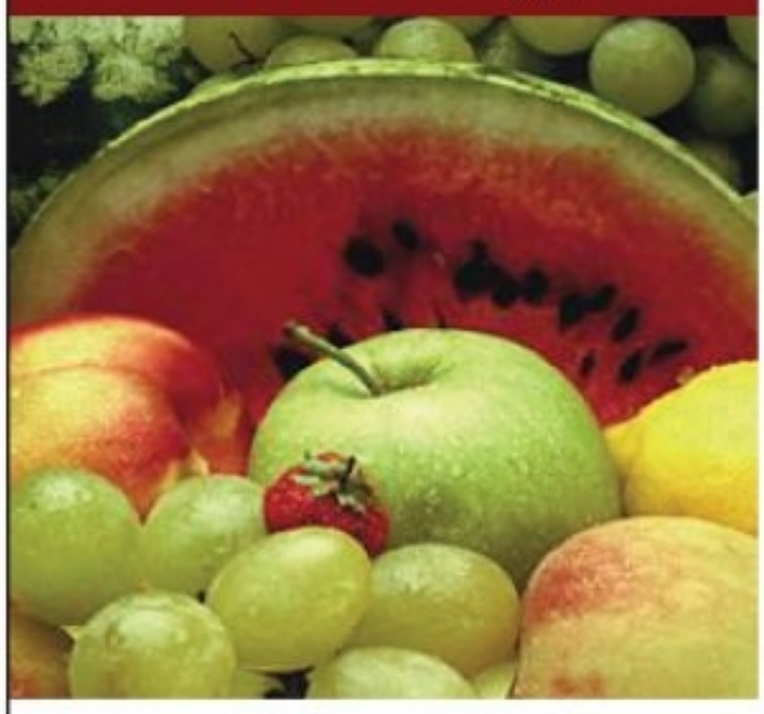
DANA-FARBER CANCER INSTITUTE

Dana-Farber Nutritionists Offer Fresh Facts on Fruits and Veggies



Should we eat raw or cooked vegetables?

Both. Vegetables are an important part of a healthy diet. Eating a variety of different types of vegetables, whether cooked or raw, provides the body with various vitamins, minerals, and phytonutrients.

Raw and cooked vegetables provide different nutrients. For example, cooked tomatoes are rich in lycopene, a nutrient that's not as available in raw tomatoes. In turn, raw tomatoes are rich in potassium and vitamin C, nutrients that decrease with cooking.

In all methods of preparation, and whether you buy them frozen or fresh, be sure to include plenty of vegetables in your daily diet.

What are the best ways to cook vegetables?

The healthiest ways to cook vegetables include steaming, stir-frying, sautéing, baking and grilling. These methods prevent the overcooking of vegetables that would disintegrate the valuable nutrients.

Which are healthier: fruits and vegetables that are fresh or frozen?

They are equal. No matter how they are stored, the nutritional value of fruits and vegetables varies only slightly whether they are fresh or frozen. Buy them and enjoy them often; that's the healthiest way to eat fruits and vegetables. Choosing locally grown produce is another option for maximizing the nutrient levels in produce.

What about canned fruits and vegetables?

Buy fruit canned in water or light/natural juice. When buying canned vegetables, check the label for the sodium content and choose the low-sodium version. Canned fruits and vegetables can be easy to digest, and therefore are good choices for persons with diarrhea due to cancer treatment or recent surgery.

Should I choose organic fruits and vegetables?

The scientific research on organic verses conventional foods and cancer risk is not conclusive enough for specific guidelines to be determined. Therefore, the decision to choose organic or conventional produce is ultimately a personal health choice.

When consuming produce, remember these points:

- Always wash all produce (organic or conventional), even if the package is labeled "pre-washed"
- If you decide to choose organic produce and cost is a concern, choose organic produce that has been found to contain the highest levels of pesticide residues when grown conventionally.

The following lists may be useful for making wise choices.

The USDA, Consumer Reports, and the Environmental Working group have investigated the amounts of pesticide residues found on commonly consumed produce and created the following tables. Produce was washed before pesticide levels were tested.

Produce with highest levels of pesticide residue:

- Apples
- Bell Peppers (Green and Red)
- Celery
- Cherries (U.S.)
- Grapes (Chile)
- Lettuce
- Nectarines
- Peaches
- Pears
- Potatoes (U.S.)
- Spinach
- Strawberries

Produce with lowest levels of pesticide residues:

- Asparagus
- Avocados
- Bananas
- Broccoli
- Sweet Corn
- Cabbage
- Eggplant
- Kiwi
- Mango
- Onions
- Pineapples
- Peas (frozen)

The bottom line

The benefits of eating fresh fruits and vegetables far outweigh the risks associated with pesticide residue. Phytonutrients found in fruits and vegetables (organic or conventional) promote immune support and detoxification in the body and are excellent sources of disease-fighting nutrients.

Isaiah Thomas is on a historic, torrid scoring pace.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

The chants, as they have for quite some time now, rang down from the TD Garden stands Monday night.

"MVP! MVP! MVP!"

They were directed at Isaiah Thomas, who had once again put the team on his back in the fourth quarter, scoring 17 of his 35 points as the Celtics beat the Hornets, 108-98.

For Thomas, it was just another game. He leads the NBA in fourth quarter scoring, averaging 10.1 points per game. He's scored 20 or more in the fourth quarter three times this season (and just missed his fourth on Monday) while no other player has done it more than once.

He's averaging 28.4 points per game this season and has scored at least 20 points in 25 straight games, the most in a row since Kevin McHale did it 30 straight times over two seasons back in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Per CSNNE, since returning from a groin injury on Dec. 16, Thomas is averaging an NBA-high 31.6 points per game while shooting 50.2 percent from the field including 43.2 percent from 3-point range. He's also dishing out 6.1 assists per game.

The MVP award still may be a bit of a reach, but the fact that Thomas can even be considered at this stage of the season is pretty special. It also means that he'll be a lock for the All-Star Game.

The question now, is, should he start?

Fan voting ended at 11:59 p.m. on Monday, but votes still need to be cast by NBA players and media. You can bet that will hurt the chances of Dwyane Wade, who has no business starting in this game despite finishing with plenty of votes for the Eastern Conference backcourt players.

That could open up a spot, and there are many who believe the Celtics' leader deserves it.

Of course, that includes his teammates.

"Very deserving [to start in the All Star Game],' Jae Crowder said of Thomas. "I think there's not another player in this league besides Kyrie [Irving] playing at the level he's at. I think he's very deserving to be starting in the All-Star Game."

Hornets point guard Kemba Walker said after Monday's game that Thomas is "playing better than anyone in our league."

It remains to be seen who ultimately is named a starter, so which players are fighting with Thomas for the spots? There is some stiff competition.

Kyrie Irving
Irving averages 23.6 points, 5.6 assists, 3.5 rebounds, and 1.1 steals per game. He also won fan voting for the East backcourt by a landslide.

Kyle Lowry
Lowry is a bull and is averaging career-highs in points per game (22.2) and rebounds per game (5.0).

DeMar DeRozan
DeRozan is having a special year for the Raptors after re-signing with them over the offseason. The shooting guard is averaging 28.1 points per game, over 4.5 points higher than his previous career high.

THE GREAT DEBATE

Those sports shows where a white guy and a black guy scream at each other while a good-looking brunette female attempts to direct traffic get huuuuge TV ratings for a weekday morning. The noise from ESPN's "First Take" and FS1's "The Undisputed" provides great background sound for gym locker rooms and dentist offices, but it's decidedly unhealthy to, ya know, actually listen to the manufactured things these people are saying. All cynicism and jealousy aside, here's a fun fact about "First Take." Wildly popular host Molly Qerim is dating wildly popular "NBA on ESPN" personality and former NBA player Jalen Rose. How about that?!

UNSOLVED MYSTERY

Pro wrestling legend Jimmy "Superfly" Snuka died on Sunday and WWE ran a tribute to him Monday. What's crazy about this wrestling death is that the 73-year-old Snuka had murder charges dropped against him just two weeks ago as he was deemed not competent to stand trial. A longstanding wrestling rumor was that Snuka murdered his girlfriend in 1983. Snuka's story was that he found his girlfriend, Nancy Argentino, dead in a hotel room with three dozen cuts and bruises. Officials determined at the time that she was hit consistently with a stationary object before dying. File under unsolved mystery that will never be solved.

DEALING DION

Former Eagles linebacker Emmanuel Acho tweeted out during the Patriots-Texans game: "To think, I got traded for #DionLewis back in 2013 … someone needs to be fired for that. He a beast!" Acho is currently unemployed in football and Lewis had three touchdowns against Houston. Former Browns (and Eagles) executive Joe Banner played along, tweeting at Acho, "I traded you for Dion and got fired. Go figure! Hope you are well." For the record, current Eagles executive Howie Roseman was the one who brought Acho to Philly and shipped Lewis to Cleveland.

Aries Don't take action based on assumptions. Learn from your experience and take a disciplined approach in order to make things unfold to your advantage.

Taurus Focus more on what you can do for others without compromising your personal or professional position. Putting in extra hours will lead to unexpected benefits.

Gemini When opportunity knocks, you have to be ready to size up what's being offered and make your move. Don't trust anyone but yourself when it comes to fact-finding.

Cancer When in doubt, take a breather and let the chaos or confusion subside. Pour your attention into self-improvements that will raise your qualifications or skills.

Leo Don't wait for change to happen when you can be the one to initiate what you want to see unfold. Do your part and show your leadership ability.

Virgo Refrain from any inclination you have to take on too much or to overspend. Moderation, hard work and determination will be rewarding. Romance is on the rise.

Libra Stay calm, and refrain from making assumptions or impulsive moves based on information that isn't conclusive. Listen carefully and respond with diplomacy.

Scorpio Avoid anyone trying to use guilt or emotional manipulation to sway you. Stay focused on what's important to you and strive for perfection, satisfaction and success.

Sagittarius You'll face confusion and uncertainty. Don't be fooled by someone trying to persuade you to do something that isn't healthy.

Capricorn Doing too much too fast will jeopardize your chance to improve your life financially, emotionally and physically. Be a leader, not a follower.

Aquarius Make personal changes that will lower your overhead and improve your life. Having more money to pursue what you enjoy doing will brighten the picture.

Pisces Getting angry will not solve your problem, but taking positive action will. Use your intelligence to make a plan that will encourage everyone to pitch in. EUGENIA LAST
